MACKAY AND THE COAGHMAN.

Actor Makes A Claver Practical

A handsome closed brougham, with an enameled monogram upon the shining olive panels and the silver lamps and polished mountings glistening in the sunlight, stood before one of the great stores in Union Souare.

The coats of the tall bay horses were glossy and smooth, the silver-nounted harness trappings shone brightly, and everything about the equipage was as it should be, except the coach-

Not that the coachman was less ele-

Not that the coachman was less elegant in appearance than the carriages or the horses. The proportions of his shest were majestic, his great cout. It is shear that shone with the undimmed luster of the maker's gloss, a handsome fur cape adorned his broad shoulders and his gloves were new and perfect.

But instead of holding his hear covet with that dignity and hauteur that belong alone to coachmen and kings, he nodded sleepily upon his box and every other minute his chin sank into the fur of his cape. There were no other carriages near and the sleepy coachman's head bobbed up and down.

Destiny had arranged that at this juncture of affairs John A. Mackay should be passing through Union Square should be passing through Union Square with a friend on his way to dress for the afternoon performance of "Evange-line" at the Fourteenth Street thea-tre.

The comedian entertains a lofty con-

The comedian entertains a lofty contempt for men who cannot stay upthree nights in succession and remain awake the next day; and, therefore, when he caught sight of the nodding coachman, his soul was disturbed. He stopped and remarked to his friend:

"I'll bet $4 that that duffer will nod his hat off in less than eight minutes," minutes,"

The other refused the risk as unduly hazardous, and the two watched the coachman for a few moments, and were about to walk on again, when Mr. Mackay was suddenly seized with an inspiration.

Mackay was suddenly seized with an inspiration.

He bade his friend go on and wait for him before the next show window. Then he stepped up to the side of the carriage, opened the door soitly and then slammed it shut again.

The effect upon the coachman was electrical. Up went his chin into the air, and in his features could be detected the relief he felt that his mistress had got into the carriage without tress had got into the carriage without detecting his criminal sleepiness.

Then he turned his head slightly to receive his directions, and observed Mr.

Mackay apparently in conversation with the occupant of the carriage. The comedian addressed a few polite remarks to the empty carriage, said "Good afternoon," raised his hat, and then turned to the conchuran. "Home." he said, and the broughman turned majestically about and rolled swiftly A moment later a seal-skin clad lady emerged from the store, followed by a porter earrying half a dozen bundles. She walked to the curbstone and looked with amazement up and down the street, and then turned angrily back to

"Far be it from me to intrude upon the sanctity of her grief," observed Mr. Mackay softly, and with his friend he walked down Fourteenth street.—[New York Sep.

A Home Question.

Sentinel has been urging objections to the employment of what it styles imported lady teachers, and now raises a howl because the contractor is employing a few Eastern bricklayers on the Carson building. It excuses the Administration by saying the President is not responsible for what the contractor does.

The Carson Appeal says the men are engaged in laying ornamental compressed brick, which is a trade by itself; but it says the Sentinel is dead right on the general proposition that Nevada raised men and women are good enough for this country. The Sentinel is prejudiced, however, on the question of teachers. Reno has dozens of its daughters scattered over Nevada, and they are doing as good work as any we have. If Eureka has any idle teachers that are capable, we can guarantee them positions. The University will soon graduate a class of thoroughly trained teachers, lut it will only have a dozen members, and the demand must for s time exceed the supply. We must ask the Sentinel what it would do in that case. Would it close the schools or employ incompetent teachers? We can see but one answer to the question. We owe a greater duty to our own children than to the grown girls of our neighbors.

Considering the money in the State school fund, Nevada owes to her children the best advantages of the closing years of the nineteenth century. If there are grown girls in the State capable of complying with the conditions, we urge with all our might and main that they have preference over the whole earth. If they are not capable, we respectfully but firmly refer them to an honorable occupation which offers them good homes and fair pay. If they are not fitted for teachers by nature or education. they must be capable in some other for he lthy and honest young ladies, where they will receive good treatment and have every respect paid them. They will be none the less them. They will be none the less the commence of the less that the commence of the l ladies because they cook and bake. Their mothers and grandmothers did it, and they married well and have no favors to ask of any one.

One thing is certain, Nevada can not afford to make a charity hospital of her school system, and the GAZETTE has no more objection to seeing educated teachers brought in when they are needed for the improvement of our children than it has to the importing of thoroughbred Merinos or Herefords. To encourage home talent, home educators and home industries, is commendable, and that work is being done. By the means of the school-houses, the University and other educational institutions of pital of her school system, and the other educational institutions of the State our young men and

"Later On."

The Pittsburg (Pa.) Dispatch says: When the managers of the Bijou engaged "Later On" for their opening attraction they made no mistake. The house was completely filled last night, and a better pleased audience is rarely found in any theater. If any one got tired it was simply because he was obliged to laugh too much. The farce obliged to laugh too much. The farce is an excellent one, abounding in refreshing humor and ridiculous situations. Its musical features are many and all good. The company is made up of first-class material, all the artists being thoroughly competent for their parts. Hallen and Hart are both very clever, and in their roles of Jack Plunger and Jolly Todd they are irresistibly funny. "Later On" is vastly better than "Natural Gas," the piece which brought its author into prominence, and it is safe to say that it will have a successful run.

Practical Hints by a Prominent Citizen

EDITOR GAZETTE: The intimation in a late issue of your valuable paper that a certain public-spirited citizen contemplated the erection of a number of cottages, to be sold on the install-Recorder of Storey county, is reported ment plan, induces me to offer a sug-langerously ill with pneumonia- gestion that will co-operate with that gestion that will co-operate with that movement. It is the formation of a Building Loan and Sayings Association. These Associations are no experiment; the plan has been long and Co.'s commercial agent, returned last thoroughly tested. In the city of night from a trip as far east as Salt Lake, and went to Carson to-day. Philadelphia 140,000 houses have been Dever Harry provided to their members alone. To members who desire to secure a home and be relieved from the burden of rent, an association of this kind affords an opportunity whereby this can be accomplished at a cost per month of but little more than they are paying for rent, and thus enable them to own their own houses. By illustration, a person living in a seven-room cottage worth about $2,500 pays $25 per month
Hickman R H
Hogan G C
Hutchinson R rent. Suppose he buys the property by paying $500 cash and borrowing $2,000 from the association to pay the balance. He subscribes for 25 shares of stock, on which the association loans him $2,000, he having bid 20 per cent. premium HIS MONTHLY INSTALLMENTS

On the stock amount to $12 50: his monthly interest on $2,500 at 8 per cent is $16 66; total monthly payments, $29 16, or $4 16 per month more than his former rent. This in eight years amounts to $399 36, which, added to his cash payment of $500, makes the actual cost of his house and lot, in excess of what he would have paid for rent, $899 36. His stock, having reached par value, cancels his loan; his house is paid for, and he is rent free forever after, with an actual profit of $1,600. Almost any one, by the practice of moderate economy, which would not materially limit their enjoyment, but increase it, lay up a few dollars from month to month by depositing it in the association, from which the money could soon be had to purchase a home; or, if such savings should not be needed for that purpose, a fund would be created for some future event. Experience has demonstrated that stock will mature or reach par value in eight years. During that time he will have paid into the asso-ciation less than $50 per share, for which he will receive $100, unless he is indebted to the association—in which case the amount borrowed by him will

HIS SECURITIES RELEASED. Thus his investments will give him larger returns than he could possibly get from any other financial system. There are now about sixty of these organizations in California. The associations as a rule have been prudently managed, and with profitable results to the shareholders, as promotive of habits of econmy and as affording means of profitable investment. Building and Loan Associations have been highly successful. An additional benefit is derived from the increase in the value of the property purchased, and in the convenient form in which the payments are made. Practically these associations have given homes to day. A detailed stateme to thousands who would otherwise affair will be given next week. never have owned them. The manufacturing of brooms, matches, step-ladders, carpets, etc., paper mills, and other enterprises could be successfully carried on here. The young men of Reno should keep it constantly in their mind that the future prosperity of the town is largely dependent upon their good efforts. If you save your money you can combine and start some manufacturing industry that pays. You have the vigor of youth on your side. As an illustration, three young men in an Eastern town put young men in an Eastern town put their net earnings into a knitting fac-tory. It required hard work and watchfulness to place it on a good pay-ing basis, "but they got there," and now employ 25 hands, and orders for their goods are coming in from all sec-tions of the country. Save something to-day for to-morrow, and put that something at work that it may help you save. If for fifty years you save fifty cents per day, and place it out on inter-est at six per cent., compounding, it est at six per cent., compounding, it will yield $47,520.30.

"A map of the road to heaven, by soul in purgatory," writes an author and literary critic, describing his ideal, and humorously confessing his failure to attain it. But if one knows the right path, he should follow it. Why, then, suffer in the purgatory of disease when the way of escape is plain in sight? As a remedy for scrofulous affections of the throat and lungs, including consumption in the formative stage of tubercles, catarrh, chronic bronchitis, tumors and morbid growths of all kinds, caused by impure or impoverished blood, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has neither a rival nor a worthy competitor.

Ladies, do not ruin your complexion by the use of poisonous cosmetics and face powders. If your face is red or sunburned, if you are so unfortunate as to have pimples or blothes on the neck or face, Dutard's Specific will not cover them like a cota of paint, but will most effectually remove all blemishes from the skin and restore it to its natural youthful bloom. Sold by Wm. Pinniger.

No woman can be contented and happy if her skin is covered with pimples and blotches. These difiguring eruptions are easily removed by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This med-icine is perfectly safe to take and is a thor-oughly reliable blood purifier.

THE ONLY PUMPKIN.

A Thanksgiving Story by GLARA MERWIN.

It was on Thanksgiving night, after all the friends and relatives who had spent a merry evening at his house had taken themselves away with loud laughter and invitations to "come over soon," shouted out of the darkness as the wagon rolled away—after the children had been sent to bed, and while his wile was still putting away the silver and table linen—that Farmer French went out alone, with a lantern swinging in his hand, to take a last look at the stable and cow-house, and make sure that the great barn-door was properly fastened.

He should have returned in ten minutes, but twenty had passed, when Mrs. French, looking at the clock, asked herself in surprise, what Henry could have found to do? And when ten more followed without bringing him, she grew alarmed, and tossing a shawl over her head, went to the barn, calling: "Henry! Henry!" There was no answer, "Henry! "She called again, her voice taking on that shrill tone which fright brings with it. "Henry! Where are you?" She stood by the barn-door now, and it was wide open, and within all was silent and dark. There was not a sound, not a glimmer of light from the luntern. Surely her husband would not have left the barn open like that? Surely if he were there, she should hear him. "Oh Henry!" she cried. Don't try to scare me, dear! for indeed I'm There she paused, struck dumb with terror. She had taken a sten forward, and her

Don't try to scare me, dear! for indeed I'm

There she paused, struck dumb with terror. She had taken a step forward, and her foot had struck something soft and heavy that lay on the barn floor. She guessed what it was her foot had touched. She did not utter his name now. She knelt down and felt about. The first thing she touched was a cold, limp hand. Then felt upward, and touched a face, cold also. She gathered it up to her breast. Dark as it was she knew well enough that it was the head that had rested there so often, her hand went through his curls and a moan escaped her. "Dead," she sobbed, "dead, dead." And then her voice came back in a wail that sang out upon the night-air and brought from the kitchen Mollie, and Bill, "the help."

from the kitchen Mollie, and Bill, "the help."

Bill, a great, stalwart fellow, lifted the master in his arms and carried him into the kitchen. How Susan French got back into the house she never knew, but as she knelt by the settee and wondered whether, with all those babies up stairs, it was right for her to pray to die too, hope came back to her in a word from Bill.

"Missans" he said "hoss an't dead—he "Missus," he said, "boss an't dead—he an't, no such a thing; he's stunned like. No doubt he's hurt mighty bad, but not dead. I wouldn't say so if I warn't sure. I'll fetch him into bed, missus, and go for the doctor. He'll come to—he'll come to."

I'll fetch him into bed, missus, and go for the doctor. He'll come to—he'll come to."

Then it seemed to the poor woman as if heaven had opened its gates and given her a glimpse of glory. She bent over him as he lay on his pillow and heard the chatter of the horses' hoofs over the hard road, on the highway leading town-ward. How long would it be before the doctor came? Meanwhile, she bathed the poor bleeding head, while Mollie chafed the cold hands. And at last she saw, that he lived. His eyes opened; but when she spoke to him, he answered her only with groans. The door opened, and—thank Heaven!—the doctor! but, worse than that, Bill, with horror in his eyes, and a hand pointing over his shoulder toward the red glare that flashed up toward the sky. The barn was on fire; and while the poor wife within the shuttered room had one thought only, "Will he I love better than the world beside, live or die?" despite the fruitless aid that came too late, though it was freely offered, barn and stable, hay and cattle, were licked up by the devouring flames. And all the efforts of the neighbors only availed to, save the little homestead and one cow.

"A poor Thanksgiving for Mrs. French," said many a kindly matron as she heard the news next morning. Yet Susan French was at that very hour thanking God; for, as the doctor went away, he said: "Keep up your heart, Susan—keep up your heart. We'll get him through yet. You'll not be a widow this time."

this time."

He would live, and what did she care for barn or store. Let all go, so that she had him. But there was a weary time before her—days of fever and delirium, days of weak misery, when the strong man had become like a fretful child. Susan's cheeks grew thin, and her hands began to show their bones. Often she wondered whether she could keep on her feet much longer, but she did; and after three month's illness Henry got about again, gannt and sallow, and was enough himself to make it necessary that he should be told what had happened.

"I suppose my lantern broke in the hay,"

"I suppose my lantern broke in the hay," he said, when he could speak. "I found the door open, and went in, and there was a man there, I grappled him, and he struck methat's all I know. Either my lantern did it, or the man was there to fire the barn. However it was, it is all over now. It will take—Susan, you took care of my pocket-book?" She came across the room and took his hands. "Darling," she said, "have patience. Your pocket-book has not been found. I thought you might remember where—"
"I always wore it in my vest." he said, "you know that. I kept my coupon bonds in it. I kept all I had about me. There were six hundred dollars in money too, and receipts I dare not lose, for they are signed by rascals. Susan, every chance I had of reveng my losses is gone, gone torever. I suppose I was robbed as I lay senseless, and I thought my own person better and safer than any bank. Look at me now, a miserable, shaking shadow, that a child could master."
"Rut you'll get strong again." said. Susan.

master."
"But you'll get strong again," said Susan,
"and we've the house and the land." But Henry was too weak to feel any hope or courage. He took to his bed again, and lay there when it was time for a farmer to be

However, he did not die, and there was However, he did not die, and there was another convalescene. Susan had not had time to be ill. She dared not. What she could do, ahe had done. But a farm needs its master. If they raised enough for food that year, that was all they could do. And it was a poor year. No fruit to speak of; vegetables small and mean, and corn a disappointment.

it was a poor year. No fruit to speak of; vegetables amall and mean, and corn a disappointment.

Moreover, one of French's creditors did prove himself a rascal; and though the farmer swore to having paid his debt, there was no receipt to be found, and a mortgage of the land was the consequence. Often the discouraged man declared that he wished the thief had also murdered him. But Susan French kept her courage up, and now that her husband was fairly on his feet, would have been perfectly happy, could she have made him so.

And thus Thanksgiving came about again, and friends shook their heads once more, and said: "Poor Mrs. French would have a different Thanksgiving from what she'd been used to." And many invitations were sent to those who had entertained so freely, while they could; but Henry would have none of them, and, to tell the truth, little toes were out, and little dresses were not fresh and holiday-like.

"We'll keep Thanksgiving at home," said Susan French.

"Thanksgiving!" said Henry, sadly. "Well, it won't be much of a one, and I can't say I feel thankful much either."

"And then there ain't any punkens," said little Lilly, "and no turkey."

"There is a pumpkin," said the mother, triumphantly—"a good one—I've kept watch over it. It's all right. And, I think rosst pork with apple sauce as good asturkey. We have got two barrels of apples. I shall keep Thanksgiving. I wouldn't missit, and, Heurry, you go to church and take John, and I'll get dianer for you—I and Laily and Susie."

"Church!" said Henry French.

"Yes, church" said Henry French.

She could see, by crouching low, the great white pearls that where to make her one pumpkin pie rieher. She put in her hand and drew them forth—four—five—and then—What was that lying there—that blackened thing. Was it—yes, it was a soft, flat pocket-book—the pocket-book in which Henry French had carried his wealth about his person. Susan drew it out, and, trembling, looked at it. It was warped and melted, but somehow only on the outside. As she tore it open she naw that within was discolored, but not burnt. Their little fortune was safe; there was hope and courage for Henry now. Susan gut back into the kitchen and flung hersell upon her knees and wept and prayed together and grew strong again.

"I smell fire," maid little John, hurrying in after church. "Ain't it good though. Pa, dinner is ready."

"And I'm ready for it," said the farmer. "How bright you all look, girls. What is it, the one pumpkin?" He spoke bitterly as he uttered the last words and drew his chair to the table. There stood the pork, the potatoes, the great golden pie, a dish of apple-sauce, and another—covered.

"What's that?" asked little John.

"What's that?" asked little John.
"Oh, John!" cried Susie.

"Will you give thanks, Henry!" said his wife.

"I suppose I ought," said Henry. "We've got a house over us this year. Next, perhaps,—no matter." He bent his head, end uttered a few words of Thanksgiving, thinking of all that a disappointed man does think even then. Then he leaned back in his chair.

"Take the cover off the little dish, Pa," cried Lilly."

"Take the cover off the little dish, Pa," cried Lilly.
"Why, what is in the little dish?" asked Henry. "Why do you all look so?"
Mrs. French reached across and lifted the lid; and Henry knew.
Everything was safe—the coupon-bonds, the money, the receipts—that of the wicked creditor included. In contrast with his state yesterday Henry felt himself a rich man, and he had the opportunity of starting fair and even with the world again, at least.
Susan was not the only one down whose

Susan was not the only one down whose cheeks tears ran that day—tears of joy and thankfulness.

And it all came about, says Henry to-day, because my Susan kept up her heart so well; was thankful to Heaven for all its mercies, and made the best she could of our "only pumpkin."

ODD SLIPS IN DISCOURSE

Some Entertaining Instances of Infelicities of Speech. A lecturer said, all unconscious of his awkward expression:

"I must beg you to give me your un-divided attention; indeed, it is absolutely impossible that you could form a true idea of the hideous animal of which we are about to speak, unless you keep your eyes fixed on me."

A certain preacher discoursing upon Bunyan and his works caused a titter among his hearers by exclaiming: "In these days, my brethren, we want more Bunyans."

Another clergyman pleading earnestly with his parishloners for the construction of a cemetery for their parish, asked them to consider the "deplorable condition of $0,000 Christian Englishmen living without Christian burial."

Still more curious was this clerical slip.
A gentleman said to the minister: "When do you expect to see Deacon S.

"Why can't they make these dummies more lifelike?" said a facetious fellow, halting with a friend in front of a clothing store on Market street and slapping a figure a vigorous blow on the cheek.

The "dummy" turned suddenly, let fly his left, and the facetious man went down on the pavement as though struck by a lightning express.—Philadelphia Times.

THE DRILL OF THE GHOSTS.

An Old Sergeant on the Plains Tells a Strange Story of Governor's Island.

"The strangest experience I ever had," said the old sergeant, was at old Fort William, on Governor's Isl-and, in New York harbor, over twenty years ago.

"I was a sergeant at the time, married, and, with my young wife had been living in a small house on the lewer end of the island, but the commanding officer concluded to tear it down, and I was told to select the best rooms of the non-commissioned officers' quarters in the then unoccupied fort.

"What with my usual military duties and the fatigue of moving and piacing things to rights, I was pretty well tired out when night came, and slept like a

"My wife was worn out, too, but "My wife was worn out, too, but did not sleep so sound as not to be disturbed every night by what she called 'the funniest noises that sounded just like thunder,' but I paid but little attention to her thinking it was only the noise of passing steamboats or the wash of the waters on the or the wash of the waters on the shore.

"It might have been two weeks after I had settled down that one night I awoke suddenly from a sound sleep with that peculiar feeling of dread or uneasiness upon me which arises from an unknown cause and has been experienced by nearly all of us.

"'John, do you hear it now!" asked my wife when she discovered I was awake; 'it sounds like some persons at work below.

"Listening for a short time, I recognized familiar sounds, and had I not been positive that the doors were locked, with the keys hanging on a nall in my room, I would have sworn that the batteries were manned by experienced gunners.

that the batteries were manned by experienced gunners.

"The quick tread of the men as they dragged the guns in, the ring of the rammer, the handling of the shot that lay piled in readiness for use, the return of the iron wheels over the ratis as it was run out of the port, were perfect in every detail, only lacking the words of command and the report of the piece to complete the illusion.

"As I listened the uproar increased

"As I listened the uproar increased in volume until it was impossible for us to hear each other's voices without raising them to a high pitch.

"The guns were served with what seemed incredible rapidity, and the very walls, massive as they were, trembled under the heavy artillery in continual motion, while the balls were rolling from one end of the casements to the other, striking the sides with heavy thuds.

to the other, striking the sides with heavy thuds.

"Unable to stand this state of affairs any longer, I arose, and, lighting my lantern, took the keys along with a loaded revolver, and, descending the stairs as lightly as possible, reached the door. The noise at this point was, if anything, more deafening than when I left my room.

"Cautiously inserting the key into the lock, I cocked my six-shooter, and throwing the door open suddenly, with raised lantern and weapon presented, entered the nearest casement to find it unoccupied save by the grim old gun and the shot stacked in their usual places.

"It was the same in every battery

"It was the same in every battery I entered. Not a footprint disturbed the thick dust upon the floor, nor was there a finger mark upon either the gun or the shot. The tomplons were in place, and no carriage had traveled over the rusty rails.

"Confounded even still more than I was before, I returned to my room, and was disturbed no more that night. The racket, however, was commenced again the following night, and was kept up, with slight intermission, for a menth.

"My account of this singular disturbance was met with jests and laughter from my fellow soldiers, which they modified, it is true, when I corroborated it by my wife, but then only so far as to declare that it was a scheme on our part to get removed from uncomfortable quarters to one of the new quarters then about completed.

"Nettled at their taunts, I vowed that if ever the noises commenced again I would have other witnesses to them, and I did not have long to wait, for about one month after I was, awakened by the phantom gunners

"This time I passed out over drawbridge, and, going to the men's quarters, awakened a sergeant by the name of Smith, and much against his will made him accompany me to the

"After standing listening to the racket until Smith's face was as white as a sheet and he was trembling from head to foot, I threw open the door.

"Smith always declared that for a moment he saw the ghostly crew at their places, but could detect nothing, nor could I ever discover any cause for the disturbance, although I often was awakened by the nightly drill of my invisible artillerymen.

"Some months after leaving the island I learned that during the Mexican
